

Teen Dating Violence

Dating violence or abuse affects one in four teens. Abuse isn't yelling, threatening, name calling, saying "I'll kill myself if you leave me," obsessive phone calling or paging and extreme possessiveness.

Are You Going Out With Someone Who...

- Is jealous and possessive, won't let you have friends, checks up on you, or will not accept breaking up?
- Tries to control you by being bossy, giving orders, making all the decisions, or not taking your opinion seriously?
- Puts you down in front of friends or tells you that you would be nothing without him or her?
- Scares you? Makes you worry about reactions to things you say or do? Threatens you? Uses or owns weapons?
- Is violent? Has a history of fighting, loses his or her temper quickly, and brags about mistreating others? Grabs, pushes, shoves or hits you?
- Pressures you for sex or is forceful or scary about sex? Gets too serious about the relationship way too fast?
- Abuses alcohol or other drugs and pressures you to use them?
- Has a history of failed relationships and always blames the other person for all of the problems?
- Believes that he or she should be in control of the relationship?
- Makes your family and friends feel uneasy and concerned for your safety?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, you could be the victim of dating abuse. Both males and females can be victims of dating violence, as can partners of both heterosexual and homosexual relationships.

What if Your Partner is Abusing You and You Want Out?

- Don't put up with the abuse. You deserve better.
- Know that you are not alone. Teens from all different backgrounds across the country are involved in or have been involved in a violent relationship
- Understand that you have done nothing wrong. It is not your fault.
- Know that the longer you stay in the abusive relationship, the more intense the violence will become. Recognize that being drunk is not an excuse for someone to become abusive.
- Talk with your parents, a friend, a counselor, a faith leader or spiritual leader or someone else you trust. The more isolated you are from friends and family, the more control the abuser has over you.

- Know that you can get help from professionals at a rape crisis center, health services, counseling centers, or your family's health care providers.
- Alert a school counselor or security officer about the abuse.
- Keep a daily log of the abuse for evidence.
- Remember that no one is justified in attacking you just because he or she is angry.
- Do not meet him or her alone. Do not let him or her in your home or car when you are alone.
- Avoid being alone at school, your job, or on the way to and from places.
- Always tell someone where you are going and when you plan on being back.
- Plan and rehearse what you will do if he or she becomes abusive.

How to be a Friend to a Victim of Dating Violence:

Most teens talk to other teens about their problems. If a friend tells you things that sound like his or her relationship is abusive, these suggestions can help.

- Don't ignore the signs of abuse. Talk to your friend.
- Express your concerns. Tell your friend that you are worried. Support, do not judge.
- Point out all of your friend's strengths- many people in abusive relationships are no longer capable of seeing their own abilities and gifts.
- Encourage your friend to confide in a trusted adult. Offer to go with your friend for professional help.
- Find out what laws in your state may protect your friend from the abuser.
- Never put yourself in a dangerous situation with the victim's partner. Do try to mediate or otherwise get directly involved.
- Call the police if you witness an assault or a battery. Tell an adult, a counselor, parent, guidance counselor, or school resource officer- if you suspect the abuse but do not witness it.

Take Action

- Educate your community. Start a peer education program on teen dating violence.
- Encourage your school or community organization to start a program to help abusers conquer their behavior. Teaching how to be in a relationship without resorting to violence will help break the cycle.
- Read up on healthy relationships and dating violence. Ask your school library to purchase books about living without violence and the cycle of domestic violence.
- Inquire about having health, social studies, contemporary living, and other classes incorporate discussions of teen dating violence and its' prevention.

This information was retyped and printed with permission from the National Crime Prevention Council for educational purposes only. For more information, please contact them at 1000 Connecticut Avenue, NW. 13 floor, Washington DC 20036 or at www.ncpc.org.

If you have any questions or concerns regarding this topic matter, or if you would like more information on teen dating violence, please call the Pembroke Pines Police Department Community Affairs Unit at 954-435-6538 or our Victim Advocate's Division at 954-436-3228.